

How to Have a Better Conversation With Your Doctor

Discussing treatment options can feel overwhelming. You may find it helpful to have the questions you want to ask with you when you meet with your doctor. This guide can help prepare you to talk with your doctor about what treatment might be right for you.

1. BEFORE YOUR APPOINTMENT

Make a plan. Write down things you want to talk about, and highlight the ones that are most important. You may also find it helpful to ask a friend or loved one to go to the appointment with you for moral support and as a second set of ears.

2. DURING YOUR APPOINTMENT

Keep your focus. This is about your body and your health. You have the right to ask questions and to get answers that you can understand. There is a lot of information to cover, but here are some important things to know by the end of your visit:

Why this treatment

How it works

What to expect

Sometimes it can feel uncomfortable asking questions or having your doctor repeat something. Remember, your doctor wants you to get the most out of your appointment, too. Here are some examples of the types of questions to ask.

- What information do you consider when recommending a treatment?
- How will I receive treatment?
- How often will I get each treatment, and how much time will each treatment take?
- How long will I be on treatment?
- Where will I get treatment?
- What are the possible side effects of treatment?
- How might I feel while I'm on treatment? Will I be able to work?
- How will I know if the treatment is working?

3. AFTER YOUR APPOINTMENT

Review what you learned. Can you complete each of the following statements? If someone went to the appointment with you, then it may help to talk about what each of you heard. Explaining what you learned to someone else is another good way to make sure you understand what was discussed.

This treatment was chosen for me because _____

It works by _____

During treatment, I can expect _____
